The Senate committee on agriculture has reported the oleomargarine bill without change. It will be considered as soon as the appropriation bills are disposed of.

The election news from Great Britain indicate that Gladstone will be beaten and badly, too. The Liberals fear now that the Conservatives will get a clear working majority.

BOYCOTTERS are beginning to find that they are amenable to the law. A lot of them has just been sentenced at New York to terms of imprisonment varying from three years and eight months to one year and six months.

The Republicans of the second Congressional district will hold their convention at Montpelier, August 4. The opposition to the present member, Gen. Grout of Barton, has not developed to any extent, and the probability is that he will be renominated by acclamation.

FRANKLIN county Republicans will not meet in convention till the 11th of August. It is alleged that the managers wait till this late date in order to lessen as much as possible the time between nomination and election, so that candidates' characters cannot be too much ventilated.

WHILE the ox was grazing in his pasture a fly came along and abused and insulted him in an outrageous manner, and finally challenged him to combat. "I cannot accept," replied the ox. "While your abuse does me no harm, a victory over you would bring me no credit."

The Watchman prints this little story, but makes no application of it. We would suggest that its moral applies very well to Senator Edmunds, on the one hand, and to the Watchman and its fellow organs, on the other.

THE Democrats do not make any kind of headway in tariff legislation. The Morrison bill was reported to the House, but consideration of it could not be had, and now the Randall bill is to be reported adversely by the ways and means committee. The latter measure, recently gotten up by the Pennsylvania Representative, repeals all forms of internal revenue taxation on tobacco, and also permits from and after the passage of the act the manufacture and sale of fruit brandies and wines free of internal revenue taxes. Wools are divided into three classes—clothing, combing and carpet wools. On the first and second classes the duty is fixed at 10 cents a pound, and on the third class 3 cents a pound.

SENATOR LOGAN'S presidential boom, which had flourished like a green bay tree up to a week ago, has lost something of its vigor since the Senator and Messrs. Evans and Teller of the Senate elections committee voted against the investigation of charges of bribery in connection with the election of Senator Payne of Ohio. Mr. Logan claims that the only evidence of bribery offered tended to show that money had been used in the caucus of the Ohio legislature when Payne was nominated, but that no attempt was made to prove the buying of votes in the legislature itself; the committee, having nothing to do with the caucus, therefore decided against an investigation. Ohio Republicans are very indignant at the committee's action.

THE BURCHARD INCIDENT.

No man who was prominent during the last presidential campaign has been more abused than the Rev. Dr. Burchard, whose unfortunate phrase, "rum, Romanism and rebellion," did quite as much harm to Mr. Blaine's cause as anything that was uttered. How it came about is explained in a plausible fashion by one H. H. Fuller of St. Paul, Minn., the head of the anti-administration faction of the Minnesota Democracy. If true, Dr. Burchard was not so stupid as he was thought at the time. Mr. Fuller's story is:

It was several weeks before election when a heavy mortgage on some property belonging to Burchard fell due. The lien was held by Smith M. Weed of Plattsburg, who at a dinner-party given for the purpose, arranged that Burchard should ring himself in on that delegation of ministers who worked the ruin of the Plumed Knight of Maine, and it was Weed who "fixed" Burchard so that he became the tool of the party he supposed he was annihilating. Weed promised to cancel that mortgage on condition that Burchard should allow him to write his remarks. The confiding man accepted, and Weed and his friends concocted the fatal sentence. The mortgage was cancelled about sixty days after election. In the first triumph Weed is reported to have given the thing away to a friend of thirty years' standing, who in a confidential moment told Mr. Fuller during his recent visit to the East.

THEOPHILUS HARRINGTON.

The man to whose memory the monument dedicated at Clarendon on Saturday was erected ranks with the great men of Vermont. In his way he was the peer of Ethan Allen and the other early patriots whom we delight to honor. Like them, his place in the world was not because of birth or superior advantages, but because of his strong mind and stout moral sense. When elected to the bench of the Supreme court, in 1803, he was a farmer of Clarendon, ignorant of the technicalities of the law, and entertaining a profound contempt for them; yet it is the testimony of such men as the late Daniel Chipman that he always got at the gist of the case and the justice of it. The incident which made him famous was his decision in the case of a fugitive slave brought before him under the act of Congress of 1793, which gave the owner power to reclaim such property in whatever State he might find it. Hon. Hoyt H. Wheeler of Jamaica, United States judge for the district of Vermont, who made the address at the dedication, tells the story thus:

The attorney was armed with affidavits of title to the slave. He seemed to doubt whether Judge Harrington understood the procedure, but put in proof an affidavit of a bill of sale of the man. Judge Harrington asked if that was all. Then he put in an affidavit of a bill of sale of the mother to the man who sold the slave. Judge Harrington said, "Is that all?" The attorney said he had gone back to the ownership of the mother. Judge Harrington said, "But you don't go back to the original proprietor. The attorney was surprised at this and asked what would answer beyond these bills of sale. Judge Harrington went back, in his mind to the original proprietor, the creator of all mankind, and over all pretended intermediate ownership of one man by another, and answered, "A bill of sale from God Almighty."

The monument was provided for by act of the legislature of 1884. Judge Veazey, chairman of the committee then appointed, presided at Saturday's exercises.

THE FOURTH.

HOW IT WAS CELEBRATED IN MIDDLEBURY ON SATURDAY.

The Fourth of July celebration in Middlebury commenced early in the evening of Friday, the 2d, and continued until a late hour on Saturday night. It was not long after dusk Friday evening when the small boy with the fire-cracker and the cannon-cracker became prevalent, and from dusk until morning there was no rest or quiet in the village. Along towards midnight two huge bonfires were started, one opposite the post-office and the other opposite L. R. Sayre's at the forks of the road on Main street. These burned brightly and illuminated the town for a brief space, and then all was still until a little after twelve o'clock.

Then the racket commenced in earnest. The factory bell had been rung intermittently between eleven and twelve o'clock. Shortly after twelve the school-house bell began to ring and it was soon followed by all the other bells in town, with the exception of that of the Catholic church, and the inharmonious harmony was kept up for about two hours. Meanwhile a good-sized cannon was brought out and from one o'clock until six in the morning it boomed out and reiterated the Declaration of Independence so loudly and so boisterously that many weary, sick and sleepless people almost wished that that declaration had never been made. But all things have an end, and so did the din of the night which ushered in the day on which we were to celebrate.

There was quite a crowd in town by nine o'clock, and the people present had plenty of time to walk around the streets, wonder when anybody was going to begin to do anything, and wipe the perspiration from their faces as they confidentially made remarks to each other on the subject of the weather. In fact there was altogether too much weather, and every body seemed sensible of that fact. It continued hot and sultry all day, so much so, indeed, that it was almost impossible to enjoy the day or any of its occurrences.

It was about 11 o'clock when the celebration was formally opened with the procession of horribles. It was in truth a horrible procession, and, for the number of participants, was ahead of anything the writer had ever before seen. The carriages, carryalls, one-hoss shays, etc., were not only remarkable and unique, but were entitled to the pan-cake, and took it. The Middlebury band, in most fantastic costumes, headed the procession, and in a truck team in the line there was a drum-corps, seated among whom was a very handsome old individual of the colored kind. The procession paraded the principal streets for about an hour, and was followed by the race of horribles, on the fair grounds. There were three entries for the race of horribles, and all three drove the same rigs in which they had appeared in the procession. J. K. Piper and Charles A. Chapman of Middlebury and an unknown entered for the fun. It was a mile race on a very dusty track, before a large and perspiring crowd. The unknown came in first with flying discolored, Charley Chapman taking the second money.

At half-past one the sports of the day were to be inaugurated on the fair ground, but it was fully two o'clock when the 100-yard race, the first of the events, was started. Col. A. S. Tracy was the judge in all the contests, and his part of the work was well done.

For the 100-yard foot race there were five entries, as follows: Leger Pantou of Vergennes and W. C. Spillings, Jerry Mulligan, James Forrest and Will Powers of Middlebury. Young Forrest won the race as he liked, while Pantou got the second money. Forrest has both bottom and speed, and it was evident that with proper training he could be made to rank up among the best of the short-distance flyers. No time was taken for the race.

Next came the running high jump. In this contest there were four entries, namely, Will C. Spillings, James Forrest and Peter Donnelly of Middlebury and Carlos Plude of Vergennes. Plude, after three trials at the first altitude, was barred out for the reason that he was unable to get over the line without touching it with his feet or hands. Spillings had apparently hard work at the first trial, the height being 4 1/2 feet, he needing his whole three trials to get clearly over the line. After that the three remaining competitors went easily and gracefully over the rope at successive rises until it had been raised to 5 feet 1 inch. All went over it very handsomely at that altitude, but when the string was put up to 5 feet 2 inches, Forrest and Donnelly, after exhausting their chances, failed to clear the line. Spillings went over it quite easily and apparently could have done a couple of inches more if it had been necessary in order to win. But it wasn't.

A sack race, distance 100 feet, came next. There were three contestants and all of them were from Vergennes, viz., Carlos Plude, Johnny LaBow and Henry January. The race was a very uninteresting one. January won and every one was glad when it was over with.

The sack race was followed by a wheelbarrow race. The entries were LaBow of Vergennes and Forrest and Spillings of Middlebury, and the race was at a quarter of a mile, best two heats in three. The race was a procession in the two heats necessary, young Forrest leading all the time and winning first money, with Spillings second in both heats and winning second prize. The bicycle race failed up for lack of entries.

Immediately after the sports on the fair grounds came the game of baseball on the college grounds, between nine players picked up in town, reinforced by Capt. Ross of the college nine, and the college nine, reinforced by the pitcher of the Pantou club. There were some nice points made in the five innings played, and the picked nine won by a score of 12 to 11.

Professor Whatsishname, who was advertised to jump over the falls, performed the feat at about 8 o'clock in the evening. The band marched down to the bridge and played, and a dummy figure was projected out of the top-story window of the marble mill into the river. The dummy was clad in red, and at a late hour at night the boys were kicking it around town in the vain hope to resuscitate the extinguished fellow and bring him back to life.

The celebration came to an end with the fireworks in the evening. A large crowd had gathered on the fair grounds, and the grounds were fairly alive with spectators when the display began, at half-past eight. The exhibition was the finest thing of the kind ever seen in this part of Vermont, and those who were present went away well satisfied. The management had promised a fine display and their promise was redeemed to the utmost. The exhibition of fireworks was given under the direction of A. B. Colby and lasted about an hour and a quarter. Then again came the small boy with his continuous fire-cracker; and it was close to Sunday morning before quietness and peace once more began to hold sway in the town.

PERSONAL.

Senator Morrill has so far recovered from his recent illness as to be able to resume his work. His appearance is thus described in a letter from a Washington correspondent: "He is twenty years older than Edmunds; still his hair is not as white as that of Senator Edmunds, and he does not look to be older than him. Picture to yourself a tall, rather well filled out man, with stooping shoulders and a great shock of iron-gray hair coming out just above his collar. Take a face of a dark complexion and bright eyes looking out from very heavy brows; add to these features a strong jaw, a rather large mouth, and a large, straight nose; pull the chin of this man down upon his chest, and let him sit in a lounging manner, half upon spine, in one of those big Senate chairs, looking out of those bright eyes from under the heavy brows, and you have Justin S. Morrill as he has appeared day after day in the United States Senate chamber."

OBITUARY.

COL. ISAAC DRAKE.

It is due to the wide circle of his acquaintance that influence that a more extended account than has yet appeared should be given of Col. Drake of Weybridge, who died at two o'clock on the afternoon of May 15, 1886.

He was born in Weybridge, March 8, 1802. His father, Dea. Asaph Drake from Easton, Mass., settled in Weybridge as early as 1760, and lived there until his death, in 1851, at the ripe age of 96. Isaac Drake was the third child in a family of six sons and three daughters, of whom the only survivors now are Miss Sarah Q. Drake and Mrs. Fuller, who is residing at the old homestead in the east part of the town.

Col. Drake united with the Congregational church in early manhood and till his death was a liberal supporter of all Christian and benevolent objects. He was deeply interested in all the business affairs of his native town, the oldest in town, and was its treasurer at the time of his death. He was punctual and constant in his attendance at church until failing health and the feebleness consequent upon old age deprived him of this privilege.

In all his social and public relations he was quiet and retiring, but his townsmen knew well the sound judgment and extended information by which he was distinguished. During the last years of his life there was no one so familiar as he with the ancient landmarks and the early history of the town, and much valuable knowledge died with him. He was frequently called into service in the affairs of the town. About 1830 he served a short term as town clerk, and was town clerk and treasurer from 1840 to 1852, when he declined to serve longer. He was town treasurer again from 1857 until his death, was justice of the peace occasionally in early years, and was financially from 1852 until his death—was apprised almost invariably on quadrennial years—was very old, and drew on the grand jury. He represented the town in 1855. In the old state militia he had the rank and title of colonel.

Although of feeble health for many years before his death, his last sickness was of short duration. The physician was not summoned until Friday and then against his protest, on Saturday morning he reached his home, and on Monday reached his heart and death instantly released him from his sufferings.

Col. Drake was married to Mary Williston Brewster March 11, 1830. She died Jan. 6, 1864. They had no children, but after the residue of estate and other matters were tenderly ministered to his declining years.

THE LATEST NEWS.

Is that all who have tried Law's Bluing find it far superior to indigo at less expense. It is used for bluing clothes and for bleaching new or old goods to a snowy white. Also, for coloring rag carpets it is unequalled, and as an ink it makes one quart, which flows equal to the best writing fluid.
